Power cuts can also impact public services and daily life. It can jeopardize patient care, transport, and education. Argentina is part of an interconnected grid, and power failures can affect Uruguay, Paraguay, and Brazil. Power cuts can highlight the need for renewable energy investments, which pushes Argentina towards solar and wind energy.

The draft hydrogen bill presented to Argentina's lower house proposes that at least 35% of project equipment should be sourced domestically, with the percentage increasing over time. However, the lack of local manufacturing capacity for electrolyzers and renewable energy equipment poses challenges to meeting these requirements.
